

Takeshi Tanikawa is the program manager of MAJESTy (Master of Arts Program for Journalist Education in Science and Technology) as well as an associate professor of film history and journalism at the Graduate School of Political Science, Waseda University, who also works as a freelance cinema journalist. After he graduated from Chuo University in 1985 with a B.A. in political science, he joined Nippon Herald Film Co. and worked there for 8 years. Since quitting the film company, he has plied between academia and journalism, getting an MA in cultural science from Saitama University (1997), where his thesis won the prestigious First Kyoto Film Culture Award; earning a PhD in sociology from Hitotsubashi University (2001); and publishing several books, including The Legend of "Easy Rider" (1996) and Visiting Leonardo DiCaprio (1999). Under a Fulbright Scholarship (1999-2000), he worked on his dissertation "The Formulation & Implementation of U.S. Film Policy toward Occupied Japan" at East Asian Institute, Columbia University, which was published later by Kyoto University Press under the title of American Films and the Occupation Policy (2002). Dr. Tanikawa then conducted research on the situation of the Film Commission system in the U.S., as U.S.-Japan Media Fellow, sponsored by U.S.-Japan Foundation, and hosted by Japan Society in New York City in 2002. After working as an associate professor of cultural studies and film history at the College of Humanities, Ibaraki University, for 2 1/2 years, Dr. Tanikawa was invited by Waseda University for his current positions.
